How long has your business been a FEMAS Participant?

15 years, it was one of the first things we did when establishing Adams and Green.

Why is your business a FEMAS Participant?

We have had knowledge of FEMAS for years and, as we were already closely involved with the scheme, choosing FEMAS was a natural fit and a "no-brainer".

However, more importantly, it gives our customers confidence that we are operating to recognised standards and demonstrates our commitment to quality, transparency and continuous improvement.

How does being a FEMAS Participant add value to your business?

FEMAS provides an independently audited framework that supports the way we operate. The scheme provides the structure and processes that underpin our day-to-day operations and supports consistency across the business.

It gives our customers assurance, strengthens our quality systems and helps maintain the high standards expected throughout the supply chain.

How does your business find the audit process?

We see the audit process as an opportunity to learn and improve. Rather than simply viewing it as a compliance exercise, we ask, "What can we learn? What can we get better at?"

We embrace the process because it helps us identify opportunities to strengthen our systems, challenge ourselves and continue developing as a business.

What are the opportunities and challenges for the future of UK feed assurance?

Future opportunities and challenges include attracting the next generation, maintaining specialist expertise and ensuring assurance schemes remain practical as regulations evolve.

At the same time, there is an opportunity to strengthen feed materials assurance by encouraging collaboration, sharing knowledge and involving businesses in shaping future standards.
